The Carnegie Library has been a center of community life since Andrew Carnegie donated it to the city at the turn of the century. The new museum will showcase the history of Washington's neighborhoods and community life. Exhibition spaces will be designed to meet the need for flexibility. It will include a permanent exhibition gallery, a changing exhibition gallery, special exhibition gallery, a library, an educational department, a small theater, a visitor's information center and food concession amenities as well as administration offices.
